"That isn't necessary, sir, for we to caught him." "Caught him?" cried both Finch and me in a breath.
 "He is outside in the custody of Assistant-Attorney Lightfoot. We captured him seven miles to the other side of Yarechester. A boy saw him about his daylight hiding behind a hedge changing his shirt, that he had on was marked with the Brevin's name. We were informed, gave chase, and, after a sharp struggle, we got him. Will you allow me to show him to your guard-room till the morning?"
 I consented, and went out with Finch to the culprit, who was handcuffed and still in my clothes.
 "Well, Prince," I began.
 "Pardon me," he said, gravely, "I am a convict, travelling under the name of Two-faces. My quarry here, Mr. Lightfoot, will explain."
 "Always was a run-in to pailer. Flash as you like and artful," said Mr. Lightfoot.
 "How he got away was marvellous! He is a magic," said the senior warden. "He was taken to-day."

taken his nerves. He had been busy letters were lying in the table, the furtherers of his household." But Finch, perhaps you are, he went on to B'n' Finch, "I will convey your brother officers an intimation to visit me at Tulkian's". The place is rough, but I am compelled to make it my residence for the present, and if any mate to come over I shall be happy to give them revenge."

"And the mess plate, Twoshoes?"

"Made into white soup hours ago."

"Melted down that is," roared Tight-look, by way of explanation.

And that was all we ever heard of it—
All the Town Round.
